How to Win at Best of Austin

In this issue we kick off another Best of Austin Awards cycle. For 34 years, we've been asking our readers to vote for their favorite people, places, and things. Here's how it works.

The Readers Poll is divided into two parts. In the first round (March 28-April 8) – aka the nominating round – you'll write in your favorites in 158 categories from the worlds of Arts & Entertainment, Kids & Family, Nightlife, Politics & Media, Services, Shopping, and Sports & Recreation.

We'll take a break to tabulate the results. then finalists will be announced (typically five in each category). Choose your favorites in this second round (May 9-20), and, if you are so moved, leave a comment telling us why you love a particular artist/business/nonprofit/park/ etc. We'll choose our favorite comments to run with winners in the June 21 issue.

Wondering why your vote matters? Well, casting a vote is a way to tell fellow Austinites that you think they're doing a good job, and who doesn't like positive reinforcement? And if you're thinking, well, what does one little vote matter among tens of thousands of votes? You'd be surprised how few votes it takes to move the needle. And even if your nominee doesn't make it to the finals, it's your opportunity to catch our attention. I use this nomination round to source ideas for Critics Picks all the time, especially in the Wild Card categories. (Yep, there are Critics Picks, too, written by Chronicle staff and contributors; we keep those secret until the June issue.)

Wondering how to get people to vote for you? Ask them! Seriously, it's totally allowed; in fact, we build free "vote for me" social media assets you can download (find a link to them in the online ballot). Make it even easier for folks by telling them which category they bought votes, no creating 12 different email accounts. It's one vote per person, period, and we actively look for fraud.

WE HAVE AN ISSUE BY KIMBERLEY

Wondering if Best of Austin is pay to play? Absolutely not. The sales staff sells ads around the ballot, but we have never allowed businesses to purchase a win, and we never will. That's why your votes are so important: We want our awards to be an accurate and organic reflection of who's doing really outstanding work in Austin.

So what are you waiting for? Cast your ballot at vote.austinchronicle.com. You can vote in one category or all of them (vote in 30 or more categories to be automatically entered to win a pair of tickets to an Austin FC game). You can also take your time with the ballot and even come back and tweak it – whatever you've got in your ballot at 11:59pm on Monday, April 8, when voting closes counts as "casting a ballot." Any more questions? Shoot me an email at kiones@austinchronicle.com with the subject line "BOA 2024 question" and I'll do my best to answer it. Happy voting!

The byline read Wayne Alan Brenner, but the one time I called him Wayne, I got a grimace in return. Brenner it was, then. For more than two decades, he covered arts, culture, and food in these pages: compiling listings; writing reviews, columns, and features; punning up a storm; and sharing his distinctive voice and unique perspective with the people of Austin. Last week, he left the paper, and the city, in pursuit of love. (He alerted readership to his recent engagement, amusingly, in a story about two new-ish boutique hotels.) He'll be missed here, but we were lucky to have him at the paper as long as we did, and luck is what we wish him, along with every happiness, in his new life in Saskatoon.

SUNNY SOLUTION

Dear Editor.

The criticism of the Austin Convention Center redevelopment could be solved with the addition of solar energy. A major criticism of the remodeling of the Austin Convention Center is that the remodel is funded by taxes yet provides no value to the local community. I believe that there is a great solution to this problem in the addition of solar panels along the roof of the Convention Center. This energy could be used by the local community for a reduced rate through the programs run by Austin Energy. This way the residents of Austin will be able to see a return on investment of their taxes and have a practical purpose for the convention center for the locals. These solar panels can be funded by the IRA bill which helps provide tax benefits to people who use solar power and implement solar panels.

LEARNING ABOUT EDUCATION

Dear Editor,

I just read the article "Closing the COVID Gap at AISD," [News, March 22]. The article was interesting and educational. It showed what AISD struggled with and the negative effects of COVID on students, teachers, and parents alike.

It also demonstrated how dedicated to education and helping the children and their families the staff at some of the "underperforming" schools are. A million meals delivered! Wow!

Although it described how detrimental COVID was to some students, the article ended hopefully. Thank you for keeping us up to date on how hard educators work. Judith Hayes

Incarcerated Women in Texas Need to Be Heard

In December of last year, the Texas Civil Rights Project released a 20-plus-page report titled "Solitary Confinement in Texas: A Crisis With No End." I was eager to read it, as I am going into my eighth year of solitary confinement at Lane Murray Unit in Gatesville, Texas, But when I came to the section about "Burdens on Women," I was disappointed to find just two paragraphs with a single personal anecdote.

I was not surprised: By design, our daily lives in this women's solitary facility are hidden from the public. There are details about our lives in "the hole" that only folks currently living it can credibly describe. Society would be appalled, BY KWANETA but we're never invited to participate HARRIS in discussions concerning us. And I find over and over that well-meaning organizations who conduct prison investigations, reports, and surveys solely focus on men's prisons or minimize our experience.

Texas Prison Reform, an anti-solitary advocacy with a self-described spokesperson for people in solitary, appeared in multiple media interviews only voicing men's demands for basic human rights to end the hunger strike last year. Women in solitary were also suffering punishment for the hunger strike, but nobody responded to us.

Texas Prisons Community Advocates relentlessly campaigned for air conditioning in prisons. They too have perfected the ostrich method by never asking, "What does it look like for women's bodies to experience extreme 120°-130° heat in solitary cells?" I reached out to organizers to explain menopause and side effects of certain medications which are overwhelmingly prescribed to women to increase our heat intolerance. Survival forces us to be nude or wear wet undergarments only; it's often misinterpreted as an invitation for sex. Their following surveys still excluded our experiences.

The media isn't exempt. Michael Barajas, formerly of Texas Observer, reported on solitary after state legislators voiced disbelief of the length of time family members said their loved ones remain in segregation. Guess who wasn't included? Women in solitary.

Got something to get off your chest?

The Chronicle welcomes submissions of opinion pieces on any topic from the community. Find guidelines and tips at austinchronicle.com/contact/opinion.

Even the Texas Inmate Families Association excludes women in solitary in their newsletters. Updates are centered on men's prisons.

The differences between men and women's facilities are numerous. When the Texas Department of Criminal Justice justifies the use of solitary confinement to "keep gangs from recruiting," incarcerated women all felt the same way: Women's prisons don't have gangs.

As our demands are ignored, abuse has proliferated. Persistent sexual abuse led us to demand a ban on all-male staff working in our building, escorting and remaining beside us during medical visits, and responding to use-of-force incidents. Not only have the demands been ignored by the prison administration, but they've also been ignored by prison reform organizations on the outside. Few organizations seem to recognize the urgency of the gender-based, sexual violence that women are particularly vulnerable to in solitary confinement.

Silencing our voices leads to a fundamentally misguided approach that men's prisons' problems and solutions can simply be copied and pasted onto women's prisons.

Our experiences reveal the fullest possible account on the abuse spectrum from relentless harassment to voyeurism, groping, and rape.

Healing can only come with acknowledgment. Acknowledgment can only come with attention. Don't be fooled into believing just because nobody is paying attention means it's not happening everywhere, especially in Texas. Abuse in women's prisons is not an individual or institutional but an endemic feature of systemic failure, and it's time the public paid attention.

Kwaneta Harris is a former nurse, business owner, and expat, now incarcerated journalist and a Haymarket Writing Freedom Fellow. She brings experiences from each profession to illuminate how the experience of being incarcerated in the largest state prison in Texas is vastly different for women in ways that directly map onto a culture rooted in misogyny. She is supported by the program Empowerment Avenue, who is submitting this on Kwaneta's behalf.

Texas Maternal Mortality Task Force Hasn't Counted Abortion Death Cases for 10 Years

cross the country, maternal mortality review committees are tasked with analyzing pregnancy-related deaths and reporting information to their respective states and the CDC.

The 2024 report from the Texas task force will be its first since the Supreme Court overturned Roe v. Wade. It's expected to cover 2020 pregnancy deaths and, later, those from 2021. But as members of the committee have been working through cases sent to them by the Texas Department of State Health Services (DSHS), they were unaware that abortion-related cases have been omitted.

"When asked by many how the Texas [task force] would gauge the impact of recent national and state legislative changes, we were confident when we responded that we review maternal deaths regardless of pregnancy outcome," said task force Chair Dr. Carla Ortique during the committee's March 22 public meeting. "We're now aware that that will not be the case."

Texas' task force is relatively new. The Legislature created the Maternal Mortality and Morbidity Review Committee in 2013 after a dramatic increase in reported maternal deaths in the early 2010s. Ortique said that a review of the statute that created

"HE SAVED MY LIFE"

Austin resident Linda S. had been experiencing the painful side effects of Peripheral Neuropathy. "My feet and legs were extremely painful and my doctor told me there was nothing they could do. That I would have to take Gabapentin for the rest of my life." Then she met Dr. Brown.

Peripheral Neuropathy is the pain, discomfort and numbness caused by nerve damage of the peripheral nervous system. Linda explained that daily tasks like opening doors and using the bathroom were overwhelmingly painful. "How can you live for the next 30 years when you don't even want to get out of bed to do simple things?"

Linda hasn't worn socks in five years and was wearing shoes two sizes too big so that nothing would 'touch' her feet. She was experiencing the burning, numbness, tingling, and sharp pains that those suffering from neuropathy often describe. "The way that I would describe it, it's equivalent to walking on glass."

Unfortunately Linda's story is all too familiar for the over 3 million people suffering from Peripheral Neuropathy.

If you are unfortunate enough to be facing the same disheartening prognosis, you're not sleeping at night because of the burning in your feet. You have difficulty walking, shopping, or doing any activity for more than 30 minutes because of the pain. You're struggling with balance and living in fear that you might fall. Your doctor told you to 'just live with the pain' and you're taking medications that aren't working or have terrible side effects.

Fortunately, four months ago Linda read an article about a new type of clinic in Austin that works with difficult to treat cases such as Peripheral Neuropathy suffers, without invasive surgeries and medications. Dr. Lucas Brown DACM, L.Ac, founder of Rosedale Acupuncture & Wellness is using the time-tested science of Acupuncture and technology originally developed by NASA that assists in increasing the blood flow and expediting recovery and healing to treat this debilitating disease.

"Now when I go to bed at night I don't have those shooting pains. I don't have that burning sensation. I don't have pain coming up my legs," Linda enthusiastically describes life after receiving treatment with Lucas. "I can wear socks and shoes!"

Now Linda and her sister operate a successful dog walking business, sometimes covering up to 5 miles a day.

"It's life altering. As far as I'm concerned, Lucas saved my life!"

Dr. Brown has been helping the senior community for over 10 years using cutting edge and innovative integrative medicine. Specializing in chronic pain cases, specifically those that have been deemed 'hopeless' or 'untreatable', he consistently generates unparalleled results.

What was once a missing link in senior healthcare is now easily accessible to the residents of Austin and the surrounding area. If you missed too many tee times because of pain or you've passed on a hike in the greenbelt because you're afraid of falling, it is time to call Lucas and his staff at Rosedale Acupuncture & Wellness Center.

It's time you let your golden years BE GOLDEN.

Dr. Lucas Brown, DAOM at Rosedale Acupuncture & Wellness, will perform a Neuropathy Severity Examination to determine the extent of the nerve damage, which consists of detailed sensory and vascular testing along with an analysis of neurological findings.

We will be offering this $40 examination to Austin Chronicle readers until April 30th. To ensure quality of care Dr. Brown will only accept 10 new Peripheral Neuropathy patients a month.

Death certificates indicate there were at least 20 abortion-related deaths in Texas from 2014 to 2020

the committee revealed that, for its entire decade of operation, the task force has not been privy to cases involving abortion.

The 2013 statute that formed the committee states, "This chapter does not apply to disclosure of records pertaining to voluntary or therapeutic termination of pregnancy." A DSHS spokesperson confirmed the agency has followed the law, omitting aboritonrelated cases, since it was enacted. So while the committee receives information about almost every death during or 12 months after a pregnancy in Texas – including deaths like those of pregnant women in certain car crashes - cases involving deaths from selfmanaged abortions have not come before the task force. (The DSHS team of 10 dedicated to reviewing maternal deaths also excludes deaths they determine were accidental, so a car crash case that could have been suicide or homicide will go to the committee, while a true accident would be excluded.)

It's unclear how many abortion-related cases the committee has unknowingly skipped since 2014. CDC data directly from death certificates shows at least 20 deaths in Texas that were coded as abortion-related from 2014 to 2020. Researchers predicted an increase in these kinds of deaths due to abortion bans. A 2021 study estimated a blanket ban of abortion would lead to 21% more pregnancy-related deaths overall in the U.S., noting that their projection was a low estimate because it didn't include potential deaths caused by unsafe, self-managed abortions.

One study found that globally, roughly 68,000 women die from unsafe abortions every year. Another study found that, in the 82 countries with restrictive abortion laws at that time, roughly two out of every 100 women had an unsafe abortion. And in 2020, when abortion was still protected by Roe, researchers estimated that more than one in 15 American women would attempt selfmanaged abortion at some point in their lives.

Doctors in Texas are required to report abortion-related deaths to the state. Passed during the 87th legislative session, Senate Bill 4 mandated that providers report all abortionrelated complications, including mortality. "Yet that data is not shared with this committee," said the task force's vice chair, Dr. Patrick Ramsey. Ramsey said that information should be within the committee's scope going forward.

"It's my hope," said Chair Ortique, "that members of the public, the media, professional organizations, community organizations, and all that recognize that the preventable death of a mother is unacceptable will hear these updates and understand the importance of engaging in efforts to ensure that the work of this committee is able to continue and will raise their voices."

"When asked by many how the Texas [task force] would gauge the impact of recent national and state legislative changes, we were confident when we responded that we review maternal deaths regardless of pregnancy outcome. ... We're now aware that that will not be the case."

BUT DPS ALSO MISLEADING

MIGRANTS: While Texas was barred by a federal court from enforcing SB 4, the highly controversial immigration bill that a federal iudge in Austin ruled unconstitutional. DPS went ahead with it, the Houston Chronicle reported. Journalists at the border heard Texas guardsmen yell false information about the law through a megaphone. The Houston Chronicle heard DPS threaten deportation to two people attempting to cross the river.

DRIVERI ESS SEMIS COMING SOON:

With support from the Texas Department of Transportation and Department of Public Safety, driverless semi-trucks will soon be barreling down Austin freeways, Community Impact reports, Trucking company Kodiak Robotics has said that it expects to begin sending out driverless trucks by the end of the year.

SMART HIGHWAYS: Self-driving cars and driverless trucking are online and coming online in Texas, but now Texas Department of Transportation says a stretch of smart highway could be coming to SH 130, Texas Standard reported. In addition to working well with autonomous cars, TxDOT says smart highways benefit non-smart-car drivers by creating more information about the road and giving that info to TxDOT.

ABORTION RULES REVISITED: The Texas Medical Board is in the midst of reviewing abortion rules, which will come into play when doctors' licenses are on the line after being accused of providing an unnecessary abortion. A plaintiff in the well-known lawsuit over Texas' abortion ban choked back tears at a TMB meeting, saying an abortion saved her fertility after she received a fatal fetal diagnosis, the Statesman reported. A member of the board suggested her abortion would have been approved by proposed rules. They aren't set in stone, and the public can still comment on them.

Texas' new immigration law is highly controversial

Travis County Judicial System Prepares for Enforcement (or Not) of SB4

Judges are urged not to deport people BY BRANT BINGAMON

Adeola Ogunkeyede, Travis County's chief public defender, is asking the county's judges to consider how they would respond to a frightening prospect: the possibility that federal courts approve Texas' antiimmigrant law, Senate Bill 4.

SB 4 would allow the Texas judicial system to take control of U.S. immigration by authorizing the arrest of people suspected of having crossed into the country outside a port of entry, bringing them before a judge, and summarily deporting them. It's widely considered unconstitutional (a federal judge in Austin ruled so) and is currently on hold. But it actually went into effect for eight hours on March 19, after the Republican majority on the U.S. Supreme Court refused to extend an injunction placed on the law in federal district court in February. That decision was guickly overridden by the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, which will hear arguments on SB 4's constitutionality on April 3. But the fact that Republicans on the nation's highest court turned their backs on one of our country's foundational principles - that federal law supersedes state law - surprised those still capable of such a reaction. Ogunkeyede is not one of them.

"I don't know that anything surprises me anymore," Ogunkeyede said. "Certainly nothing out of the Supreme Court."

Ogunkeyede told us that one of the biggest problems with SB 4 is that those subject to deportation are not guaranteed the right to an attorney. Judges acting under its authority may also ignore U.S. and international law requiring anyone entering the country to be allowed to apply for asylum.

However, SB 4 does not require judges to deport people – they may exercise discretion, Ogunkevede said. On Feb. 29, she asked the county's judges to take advantage of that power. "We write to urge the magistrate judges of Travis County not to exercise their discretionary power to order people to leave the United States under this new law," the letter stated. "Additionally, we urge magistrates to ensure that all individuals facing the immigration-related offenses created by SB 4 are afforded counsel and, as necessary, adequate language access services at their magistration appearance."

In the letter, Ogunkeyede quoted Supreme Court precedent guaranteeing the right to an attorney for those subject to deportation and quoted passages describing it as a particularly severe penalty that may result in "loss of both property and life, or of all that makes life worth living." She noted that deportation separates parents from children and may subject migrants to torture, starvation, and political repression in their home country. And she pointed out that SB 4 can be enforced anywhere in Texas, not just at the border, and could lead to the deportation of people who were brought to this country as young children.

Ogunkeyede's letter was directed particularly at Austin's appointed municipal court judges, known as magistrates, and their boss, Judge Sherry Statman. These magistrates would be most likely to preside over SB 4 cases, should they occur. They are unable to comment on the law, lest they violate ethics rules, but Ogunkeyede said she believes none have received any guidance from the state on how to handle SB 4 cases because such guidance might further highlight the law's unconstitutionality.

"I don't know that anything surprises me anymore. Certainly nothing out of the Supreme Court."

CHIEF PUBLIC DEFENDER ADEOLA OGUNKEYEDE

Aside from Ogunkeyede, other actors in the local judicial system are expressing opposition to SB 4. After the Supreme Court allowed the law to go into effect, the Austin Police Department issued a statement saying that its officers would be unlikely to make warrantless arrests under it. "APD respects and serves the whole Austin community," the statement read. "It is vital for the community to understand that APD will continue to follow its policies and state law that prohibit racial profiling." County Attorney Delia Garza released a statement saying, in part, "A law that subjects such a large portion of our community to potential racial profiling and fear is incredibly misguided, cruel, and discourages victims and survivors from coming forward to engage with law enforcement."

Ogunkeyede said that SB 4 heightens the need for the county to provide counsel at first appearance – free attorneys for impoverished people appearing before a judge for the first time after arrest. Right now, no one in the county has a lawyer in the room during these initial hearings. She noted that community members expressed fears about SB 4 at a March 21 work session of the Travis County Commissioners Court, which examined the state of indigent defense.

"Ten to 15 different community members spoke about counsel at first appearance and the exposure of people in our community to not being represented by lawyers at that appearance," Ogunkeyede said. "They're concerned particularly in light of SB 4. Which is one of the asks in our letter: We want the Public Defender's Office to provide counsel and support on SB 4. If a magistrate is presented with a charging instrument that includes an SB 4 offense, call us. We will be there."

FUTURE CITY MANAGER

T.C. BROADNAX,

same kind of focus

T.C. Broadnax Selected as Austin's Next City Manager

City Council to initiate hiring process next week BY AUSTIN SANDERS

The search for Austin's next city manager has come to an end.

After a three-month search conducted by headhunter firm Mosaic, a single public forum with the two finalists produced by that search, and half a day of interviews with City Council members, on March 26 Mayor Kirk Watson announced that outgoing Dallas City Manager T.C. Broadnax is Council's preferred candidate. They plan to offer him the job formally at next week's Council meeting, April 4.

In a statement responding to the announcement, Broadnax said he was honored to be selected as the next chief executive of Austin's government. "With the continued growth of our state's capital city," Broadnax said. "I am mindful of the critical needs we must urgently address and I am committed to doing so with a collaborative, transparent, inclusive and equitable approach."

Broadnax likely edged out the other finalist, Sara Hensley, for two primary reasons. One, Broadnax has big-city experience -Dallas has an estimated population of about 1.3 million people, per the latest American Community Survey figures (Austin has about 983,000 people). Council members were looking for a candidate who had experience navigating the kind of challenges Austin has faced in the past few years and will face in the next few. Meanwhile, Denton has a much smaller population of about 160,000 people. Secondly, Hensley has a history in Austin, which seems to have worked against her in the minds of some CMs. Prior to taking the Denton city manager job, which she currently holds, Hensley worked in Austin for 11 years, including stints as the director of the Parks and Recreation Department and interim assistant city manager. But some CMs wanted something of a fresh start with the next manager - someone who could bring an outsider's perspective to Austin government.

At the March 25 public forum hosted by the city, Broadnax emphasized his commitment to equity and inclusion at Dallas City Hall and trumpeted the city's recent success with a rapid rehousing program. He said the program, which is designed to move people living on the streets into apartments for around a year, launched in October 2021 with the goal of housing 2,500 people. The program exceeded that goal and, as of last week, the Dallas housing staff reported that it had housed around 3,600 individuals. "We can get that same kind of focus [in Austin] to how we deal with our unhoused and really have an all-hands-ondeck attitude so we can have similar types of successes here," Broadnax said.

Just hours before Council selected Broadnax, he and Hensley both addressed questions from the media. Broadnax said one of his top priorities if selected would be hiring a permanent chief to lead the Austin Police Department, which is currently headed by interim Chief Robin Henderson. He emphasized that the search should be conducted openly and with public input.

Broadnax was also asked how he would approach managing the police chief – who is subordinate to the city manager - if conflicts arise between policy direction initiated by City Council and execution of that vision by the chief. This dynamic has been a frequent problem over the past four years, from implementing Council direction on deprioritizing possession of marijuana offenses to implementing reforms to the Austin Police Academy and cooperating with the creation of a robust system of civilian police oversight.

"It's my responsibility to lay out and share with the Council how [their vision] will be implemented," Broadnax said. "And so I have no reservations that things that we're required to do, we're going to do. And folks who work for me would obviously understand that and actually find ways to implement the things that we've been directed to implement."

Next week, Council will authorize staff to negotiate and execute a contract with Broadnax for the city manager job. His salary is likely to approach or exceed $400,000 annually (interim City Manager Jesús Garza was paid around $350,000 in 2023). The negotiations will also identify a start date for Broadnax, who is expected to officially step down as Dallas city manager in June.

BIG SPENDERS FOR SCHOOL

VOUCHERS: Looking at some of the top spenders in Texas primaries, the Statesman's Keri Heath found that proponents of so-called school choice outspent the biggest donors opposing school vouchers (public school money diverted to private school tuition) by more than three to one. The largest contributions were from out of state.

including a pre-K student, died in a school bus crash in Hays County last week. The victims are 5-year-old Ulises Rodriguez Montoya of Tom Green Elementary School and 33-year-old Ryan Wallace, a Ph.D. student at UT-Austin. At least 20 people were hospitalized after the crash, the Statesman reported.

NEWSPAPER CEO HATES UNION:

Gannett owns a lot of daily newspapers nationwide, including the Statesman. After losing half of its workforce in the last five years, there's been an uptick in union activity at Gannett. This week, CEO Michael Reed told Axios the union "plays dirty and lies to our employees." The NewsGuild-CWA responded in a statement: "Gannett's last SEC filing showed Mike Reed making 66 times that of a median employee, while paying journalists poverty wages."

DON'T STARE: The Houston Chronicle reminded its readers this week not to look directly at the solar eclipse without protection: "Don't let your lasting memory of the total solar eclipse over Texas be a hole in your retina." They explain that the difference between looking at the solar eclipse and the regular ol' sun is that natural reflexes prevent people from looking at the sun long enough to cause serious damage, while the eclipse is sneakier.

A door in Central Booking labeled "Magistration" leads to the small space where first appearances occur

Travis County Aims to Allow Defenders at Bail Hearings Starting in April

The defunct program has faced a two-year uphill battle

BY AUSTIN SANDERS

Nearly two years after Travis County officials suspended a program that offered legal representation to indigent defendants at their first bail hearing after arrest, the Chronicle has learned that a new, limited test of the program – known as Counsel at First Appearance (CAFA) – is set to take place at the end of April.

Criminal justice advocates describe CAFA as not only a constitutionally protected right that local government must provide to everyone but a tool instrumental in helping the Austin-Travis County community achieve its goals around creating a more just legal system. Advocates argue that arrestees with legal representation at magistration (the initial bail hearing following arrest) are less likely to be booked into jail unnecessarily, and more likely to have better outcomes if their cases proceed through the criminal justice system.

Now, the county is preparing to take the first, albeit small, steps toward reviving CAFA. "Travis County is committed to improving access to justice for all people," County Judge Andy Brown told us, March 26, of the CAFA test plan, which is still under development. "And this means providing CAFA. We're going to make sure we work with all of our partners to get a plan in place as quickly as possible."

Under that proposed plan, outlined in an email sent by Travis County's Justice & Public Safety Executive Vicky Ashley to CAFA stakeholders (excluding Travis County Sheriff Sally Hernandez), the test will begin with two eight-hour shifts tentatively scheduled for April 23 and 25. Defense attorneys for the first shift will be provided by Capital Area Private Defender Service, the nonprofit organization that has for years provided indigent defense to adult clients in Travis County, even since the Public Defender's Office was created in 2019. PDO attorneys will cover the second shift. The hearings will be conducted by visiting judges and held in the large auxiliary courtroom located on the first floor of the Blackwell-Thurman Criminal Justice Center. Attorneys and judges are hopeful that defense counsel will be able to meet with their clients in person before hearings, but if that proves logistically unworkable, the county is also exploring providing attorneys access to clients via videoconference.

A letter sent to Travis County leaders March 20 and signed by three dozen justice advocacy organizations describes the county's current lack of CAFA as a "crisis that warrants immediate action." The letter says that by denying access to attorneys, "Travis County forces scores of people to make an impossible choice each day: remain locked up in jail ... or argue for their freedom at initial bail hearings without the support of an attorney."

A staff briefing at a

Commissioners Court work session the next day looked at the state of indigent legal defense in the county and brought more urgency to the matter. The letter and subsequent briefing seem to have prompted the latest, somewhat frenzied effort at reviving CAFA.

The CAFA test may be helpful to people arrested April 23 or 25, but to create the kind of program advocates, attorneys, judges, and city and county leaders all say they want will take much more planning and budgeting.

Magistration is mostly run by the county, but the actual decision makers – i.e., the magistrate judges – are city employees appointed by City Council. Full CAFA implementation will require cooperation from both entities. A process to begin that planning is outlined in the interlocal agreement between the city and county that governs operations of the Central Booking Facility, where magistration currently occurs.

Per new terms added to the interlocal agreement in January, when it was extended by one year, the county must provide the Austin Municipal Court with a 45-day notice before beginning a collaborative CAFA pilot. Once the CAFA collaboration begins, city magistrates will handle four CAFA shifts per month. They're planning to start in May, a city spokesperson said. Travis County Criminal Court judges have also committed to covering another four shifts per month once a longer-term pilot begins, District Judge Clifford Brown told the Chronicle.

The CAFA test represents a small bit of progress on an issue that has been stuck in planning hell since the 2022 pilot version of the program fizzled out just nine days after it was launched. At the time, Sheriff Sally Hernandez said too much of the new work required to support CAFA fell on the backs of her already overworked deputies (in addition to providing security, deputies were also carrying paperwork to and from judges and attorneys). Continuing CAFA, as designed then, was untenable for her office. After five TCSO employees resigned during the failed pilot, Hernandez told Travis County commissioners she could not continue to support the program without more staffing and a more accommodating facility. "CAFA is very important," Hernandez said in a March 22 news release responding to the letter from advocates and comments from speakers at the Commissioners Court work session. "But I couldn't stand for people to give up on their careers because they were pushed to the breaking point."

Hernandez has pushed for more staffing and a renovated Central Booking Facility as elements of a long-term solution. As a temporary measure, she has proposed conducting the hearings via videoconference – and has already upgraded the Wi-Fi at the current facility to make that possible. But Adeola

> Ogunkeyede, Travis County's chief public defender, has resisted. "PDO has submitted studies and research that shows virtual court proceedings, particularly of the first appearance type, are ineffective to produce the outcomes we're all trying to reach by implementing CAFA," Ogunkeyede told commissioners at their work session.

"It's going to take collaboration, not a work session."

the blame game in

SHERIFF SALLY HERNANDEZ

If realized, the two test shifts will be a small step forward in reviving CAFA (there are 1,095 magistration shifts in a calendar year). But the city and county still have a long way to go before the program can be made available to anyone facing arrest in Travis County every day of the year at any hour of the day (county staff estimates year-round CAFA coverage will cost about $6.5 million per year).

But, clearly, some bitter feelings remain as that work continues. "If we're going to make CAFA happen," Hernandez said March 22, "It's going to take collaboration, not the blame game in a work session."

THE AUSTIN CHRONIC, BY KEVIN CURTIN

Cheech and Chong and Toking With a Troll

Stoner icons materialize for surprise C-Boy's appearance

You usually don't put out a joint when Cheech Marin and Tommy Chong walk past you, but I did on a recent Monday night. I was on the back deck of C-Bov's getting in the right headspace and talking to all the old-school scenesters there for Swollen Circus - a SXSW-week local hootenanny that Michael Hall from the Wild Seeds and Walter Salas-Humara from the Silos have been throwing since around 1995. The veteran comedy duo's publicists had alerted me that they'd be making an appearance at the club that night, but it was unclear what it would consist of ... and I figured they'd be showing up, promoting their new doc, and splitting.

I was sitting at a table with Nick Fong from Loteria. probably wearing out his ears talking about the formative childhood moment of discovering the Big Bambu in my dad's record collection (the 12" rolling paper had been used decades before), when I spied the countercultural heroes and their crew, including Chong's actor/producer daughter Robbi, heading toward the club's back door.

Kevin and Malin

"Oh shit! It's really happening." I stubbed out the joint, absentmindedly leaving it in the ashtray, then hustled into the packed club and stood sidestage as David Bushell stepped up to the mic to introduce himself as the director of Cheech & Chong's Last Movie, which was premiering at SXSW the following afternoon, and asked if we'd like see the stars of that film?

Marin and Chong - 77 and 85 years old, respectively - entered the stage waving to a crowd with minds blown and phones up. Chong picked up an acoustic guitar and strummed on it, but the sound was only coming through the main speakers, not the monitors, so he set it back down.

"Thank you and goodnight." Marin said. pantomiming leaving the stage. Without fuss, Chong turned around and picked up a TV yellow Gibson Les Paul Jr. that was leaning on an amplifier and gave it a confident strum as Marin began singing: "Mexican Americans don't like to just get into gang fights They like flowers and music and white girls named Debbie too..."

It reminded me how in 1980's Cheech and Chong's Next Movie, from which the song originated. Cheech follows it by saying: "How do you like it? It's like a protest tune," and how Marin really is a prominent ambassador for the Chicano community including opening the world's definitive Chicano art museum. And he's continued to expose younger generations to aspects of culture, which I know because my 4-yearold son is obsessed with the Cars movies where Cheech portrays Ramone - a low and slow '59 Impala who gives other cars in Radiator Springs cool paint jobs.

He closed the song with a couplet that's not in the movie:

"Mexican Americans have been here forever

And we're gonna be here forever and we only want what's fair."

Cheech & Chona's Last Movie

In Next Movie, Chong says he was writing another song while Cheech was singing "Mexican Americans" and then sings the word "beaners" a couple times before they get interrupted by a phone call. On Monday, the crowd at C-Boy's actually got to hear that song as Chong expounded on it - ex. "Beaners, they like to drown in their cologne" - and it ended with him saying he loved his friend Cheech.

Fifty-six years on, their special chemistry remains intact.

Before they were hustled off into a waiting van out back I gave Marin a high five and thanked him for coming. He laughed and said, "Of course, man. I love all you crazy people from Austin."

The table I'd been sitting at was now full of people and I begged their pardon as I reached into the ashtrav and found my joint still there. The next afternoon, the two elderly stoner icons arrived in style to the Paramount Theatre for the premiere of Last Movie, co-produced by local peaceand-love billionaire John Paul DeJoria, riding in a black sedan pulling a smoking 60-foot joint.

Despite SXSW having a drastically declining number of cannabis-related panels, which I reported on in January, one could still stay busy going to marijuana-related events during the conference. This included an Outlaw Party benefiting the Last Prisoner Project; a doc premiere for Kiss My Grass, which highlights underrepresentation of women of color in the cannabis industry, and a subsequent panel with Rosario Dawson. Mary Prvor. Whitney Beatty. Hilary Yu. and Hope Wiseman; and a really fascinating panel – oriented around a company called FloraWorks - where I listened to really smart biochemists discussing developing therapeutics from minor cannabinoids ... you know, the 100-plus elements that aren't THC, CBD, CBN, etc.

More on that in another column. For now, I want to leave you with a tip on smoking with Austin's newest resident.

On March 15, a 20-foot-tall troll appeared in Pease Park. Created by Danish artist Thomas Dambo, it's a wondrous work to see in person: a sweet face of cleanly planed wood, hair made from curly branches, body constructed from recycled pallets and pickets, and a very bohemian stone necklace. The big-nosed creature's name is Malin and, I assure you, Malin has great vibes.

If you are like me and you want to smoke a joint with Malin, I'd like to give you some firsthand advice. The troll is crawling with kiddos all day and evening, but if you go at 7am you can watch the sun come up through the trees as it illuminates this breathtaking piece of park art and hardly see anyone except for some early morning runners on the trail nearby. It's a world-class wake-andbake experience and when you look at its hexagonal eyelids, you'll wonder if maybe Malin smokes some troll herbs too.

ack in 2011, Danny Brown was a 30-year-old, not very famous yet, Detroit rapper who'd released his debut album the previous March and recently signed to the influential indie label Fool's Gold. He had his first-ever fly-out shows on the books: a run of performances at South by Southwest, and he'd be damned if he didn't spend his entire album advance that week in Austin.

"I didn't give a fuck if I rapped in front of five people or 5,000 – I was gonna go there and try to kick ass," Brown recalls 13 years later. "I was motivated."

That energy was warranted. This was peak hipster era in Austin and hype was mounting – not just for the rapidly growing city, but its flagship entertainment industry conference. Dreams were still being minted at SXSW, and at the pinnacle of its influence was a festival-within-afestival that spectators scrambled to RSVP for: Fader Fort.

Brown was not booked to play there. But Raphael Saadiq was. And when travel delays made the progressive R&B veteran unavailable for his midweek appearance, a door opened for the rapper.

"They just hit me up randomly, like 'Danny, can you slide in and play?' So I was able to play Fader Fort and I did a good set and they loved me and shit," Brown recollects. That set proved to be the starter pistol for a SXSW blitz where he'd step in and steal the show.

"I was still that wild card and people didn't really know me at the shows, then I'd rap and they'd be like 'Ah, this is SICK!" he says. "Seeing how the crowd would change from me walking into a building to me leaving. It was a moment – it felt special."

Soon arrived his now-classic XXX. It's a portrait of an artist at 30, with all the essential Danny Brown elements crystallizing: wild wordplay; a squawking, high-register vocal delivery that interlaces the beat like a trumpet solo; and a crazy-cousin personality that instantly made him one of the genre's most intriguing characters. The following SXSW, he was on the cover of The Fader magazine and headlining their event.

"I remember after doing that one show and coming home, my Twitter followers and everything just exploded and everyone was talking about me and wanted to talk to me," he says.

Pressure? No, it was a relief, Brown tells me. He'd just turned 30, and had been rapping since he was 5 years old. Things were finally happening.

Then and now, he looks at that time in Austin as transformative.

"It changed my life," he says. "Everything really happened after South By. That's why it's so crazy that I live here now. This is the city that made my career! So, for me, it's like I went back to the motherland!"

With that, Brown lets out his intoxicating laugh, which deserves to be the doorbell at the gates of heaven. Not a giggle, nor a snicker or even a chortle – it's an allcaps, uninhibited crack-up. Punctuative in function, it connects closely to the words that prompted it. And it's reminiscent of a cartoon dog that swallowed an accordion. An attempted transcription might read: "A-HEARH, HEARH, HEARH, heh-heh."

On March 16, 2023, a dozen years after his SXSW breakout, Brown stood onstage at a Dr. Martens pop-up on Rainey Street and apologized to fans for potentially being a bad influence. It was a strange way to spend his birthday.

"I made so many songs about doing drugs and all types of fucked-up shit," he said, standing with one leg perched on the stage monitor. "And sometimes I feel bad about that shit because I know there's probably a lot of kids that hear me rap about doing molly and they're like, 'Shit, Danny Brown rapped about it – it ain't too bad' and try it and fuck your whole life up. And if I fucked your life up, I'm sorry."

That mea culpa was part of a two-minute speech in which he laid out a major lifestyle change to come.

"At the end of the day I'm 42 years old. Me sitting around smoking blunts all day, gettin' drunk ... shit is gettin' old, man," he admitted. "I know y'all way younger than me so, everybody, have your fun, but make sure it's fun because shit could get dark and I got to a real dark place with it. So now I'm gonna go get help."

The crowd cheered – lovingly, supportively. Maybe they'd seen the signs, like when he got sloppy drunk on a 2020 livestream with collaborator JPEGMAFIA, while playing the newest Grand Theft Auto for Rockstar Games. He repeatedly blew the mission, then flew into a cringey rant, targeted at "incel" gamers, where he bragged about having fired guns at people in real life.

On his podcast The Danny Brown Show, just days after his onstage confession, Brown would discuss feeling stifled and manipulated by those who controlled his output. He implored fans to ruthlessly harass Warp Records and his manager Dart Parker for delaying the release of his sixth album Quaranta, which he claimed he'd delivered to the label two years prior. It wasn't long before Brown apologized, tweeting: "That's why alcohol is something I need to be done with cause it makes me hurt the people that care the most."

Still, Brown's rehab announcement at SXSW felt as genuine as any exchange I'd ever witnessed between a performer and his audience. Facing the music and taking the first steps to improve his influence on the world, he seemed to know that rehab couldn't come soon enough.

"Honestly, my dumbass supposed to been gone, but I'm so broke I still gotta do shows to make some money before I take my ass in," he told the crowd before launching into "Dip" ... a song about getting high as fuck on molly.

It would have been a fitting moment to perform the title track to Quaranta, which begins with the couplet "This rap shit done saved my life/ And fucked it up at the same time."

THE AMERICAN DREAM

Enter suburbia.

Brown's house, in the farthest northern edge of Austin, sits in one of those neighborhoods where residents probably fear the HOA more than the cops. It's some kind of American dream: uniform, safe, calm. I bet if you left your wallet on top of the mailbox, the money would still be in it the next morning.

Walking up, I'm dubious that the man who once rapped "Got a rat bitch that smoke Blacks until the plastic melt" actually lives in such a place. But when I knock on the door, he's there, shushing the two Chihuahuas barking behind him. We're 1,200 miles from his city of birth, but culturally it feels even farther.

Daniel Sewell was born in 1981 Detroit the decade after white flight, where hundreds of thousands of Caucasian families split for the suburbs to make "The D" America's Blackest big city. Raised on the hardscrabble west side, he attended Jamieson Elementary. Now an abandoned building with plywood over the windows, the school was also the site of his earliest Danny Brown rap performance.

"The first time I rapped was for show-and-tell," he tells me in his home studio, which contains a life-size cutout of Pitbull for no other reason than that he thinks it's funny. "I didn't pay attention the day before and didn't bring nothing to show, so I just got up in front of the class and rapped. The class jumped up and started clapping and, after that, the teacher always tried to put me in any little program the school had and have me rap in it. I rapped at my fifth-grade graduation."

The child of two teenage parents, Brown says he was his family's comic relief, but was also reserved amongst his peers.

"I was shy as a kid because I had messed-up teeth – so you know that would do something on your self-esteem," he reveals, bringing attention to the pristine incisors he had implanted in 2017 to fill his famous front gap. "I didn't want to talk too much because I didn't want people to jump at my teeth and shit, so I always kind of stayed quiet."

Rapping, though, would bring out his personality. Brown's go-to icebreaker in a new school or social situation was to challenge another young lyricist to a battle and turn heads, which resulted in him being "a popular kid."

Upon moving to the city's east side, Brown's parents enrolled him in a charter school, not far from the affluent suburb of Grosse Pointe, that had foreign exchange students and elective classes that inner-city schools didn't. He was a solid student until interest in girls outweighed his passion for academics.

"By the time I was in high school, school was just a fashion show to me," explains the ever-stylish Brown, currently wearing a pair of enormous, patchwork flare jeans with a gleaming Jesus piece on his neck. "There was this one third-floor wall where, every class break, you go to your spot and everyone [would] just walk around looking at everyone's outfits. If you didn't dress good, you wouldn't get a spot on the wall."

Brown describes his adolescent style as "dressy." To stay decked in Tommy Hilfiger shirts, Timberland boots, and Coach belts with the tag hanging, a 14-year-old Brown forged a work permit, toiled full-time at a buffet in St. Clair Shores, and blew his whole check on his wardrobe – except for the occasional video game.

You know that credibility question we ask ourselves: Would my high school self like the person I grew up to be? Brown doesn't have to ponder it much.

"I feel like I never really grew up because the same shit I did at 16, I do now – just sit around and play video games and buy clothes and rap," he laughs. "I never really had that transition where I had to grow up and get responsibilities aside from being the best-dressed I could be and the dopest rapper I could be. And I made a career out of it, so I feel like I've been living the American dream." That American dream has been playing out in Austin since he settled here in 2021.

There's a tired townie expression: "No matter when you moved to Austin, you just missed it." It's lampooning a painfully nostalgic perspective that the glow of the past is always brighter than the future. People have been saying it since before Willie Nelson started wearing braids.

But when Brown tells me, "I wish I would have moved here sooner," he's not talking about missing out on anything – he just likes what the city has to offer.

For one thing, he loves H-E-B. He talks about the grocery store so much on The Danny Brown Show that they should be paying him ad money. He's called it his new nightclub –

"I go there for no reason!" – and extolled its healthy, premade meals: "I feel like it's an old Black lady cookin' that shit. I don't think it's white people back there." When I point out one H-E-B misstep, how they hideously named their knock-off Go-Gurt "Sqlurp!," he stands up for the Texas supermarket: "Man, a lot of their off-brand versions taste better than the actual product!"

Enjoying his fresh perspective on Austin, I pepper him with questions about the local culture.

What's your impression of the food here?

"It's great! When I moved here I got fat as fuck! The first thing I noticed was the way things were seasoned – like this shit is extra seasoned-out compared to being back home. This is a food city for sure. My girlfriend, she always wants to go to some fancy stuff and I like that shit too, but I really like the wing spots – I'm a Pluckers guy. There's a great spot around the corner from here, Hurricane Grill & Wings, and they got the creamy lemon pepper wings. I love that shit!"

How good do dogs have it in Austin?

"I feel like dogs in Detroit – that's your burglar alarm. You got him chained up in the backyard and you throw food at him and make sure no one breaks in the house. Here, it's like a dog show! A lot of smaller dogs and just naturally pretty dogs. You go to the dog park and everybody's showing off their cool dog – and our little dogs are my best friends.

"But I remember, in Detroit, there used to be packs of stray dogs – big, furious animals – and if you were out on a late night, those motherfuckers might attack your ass!"

As I continue prompting Brown for Detroiter-in-Austin observations, we begin to talk about how trapped you feel in the Michigan winter. Then, by accident, the talk turns heavy.

"I never had intentions on leaving Detroit. I thought I'd live there for the rest of my life, but Detroit's hard – it's not easy living – and I don't think I ever would've got sober if I wasn't here," he points out. "I'm healthier and happier here. There are times when I go out in the morning and it's warm. Feeling the concrete on my bare foot and shit, I just think, 'Fuck, I'm so happy I'm here."

TELL ME WHAT I DON'T KNOW

Brown's biggest fear about getting sober was that he wouldn't be as good at music or he wouldn't be as funny as before.

It was a concern he frequently discussed with a spiritual adviser last April at an inpatient rehab facility in rural Pennsylvania.

"She gave me the confidence that those things were ingrained in me and, if anything, doing all these substances was putting a forcefield around it so I wasn't meeting my maximum potential," he says. "And she was right." Brown anticipated rehab being like county jail (which he's been to), but he says it turned out to be more like college (which he hasn't been to). There was a schedule, classes, groups, homework, and exercise – plus some of the best food he's ever eaten. He characterizes the time he spent there as one of his "funnest experiences ever."

He didn't mean to quit smoking weed, but it happened. As he's said on his podcast: "It turns out my weed bone's connected to my booze bone and my booze bone's connected to my coke bone and my coke bone's connected to my dick bone."

So these days he proudly goes to bed at 10pm, except the night before our interview, because his old friend Hannibal Buress made him judge a late-night event at Joe Rogan's Comedy Mothership. With encouragement from Buress, Brown's tried his hand at proper standup sets, and wants to pursue it more. Fans can already hear him being effortlessly hilarious every week on The Danny Brown Show – part of YMH Studios, a popular podcast network run by the Austin-based married comedians Tom Segura and Christina Pazsitzky.

As an excellent interviewer, Brown doesn't interrupt his musician and comedian guests and shows a genuine interest in what they're saying. He says he only has one secret: Don't prepare.

"I found out that when I do too much research on someone it turns out just like everybody else's interview," he says. "So to keep that natural element, I just try to get to know them in the process."

Asked what his worst interview was, he's quick to answer: "Obviously Steve-O's ass."

Last November the internet at large roasted the Jackass star for going on the podcast and clearly not knowing who Brown was.

"I really wanted to talk to him because he's been successful in his sobriety for years, so I thought that was something we could connect on," Brown says. "I guess I'd be surprised if Steve-O listened to my music, but I would think he'd do the homework. It was just awkward and the clips went viral and it was being pushed in a negative light – that's what I didn't like about it."

On the topic of optics, I ask Brown if there's any baggage – good or bad – that comes with Austin's modern comedy boom and its stars who sometimes court controversy.

"It hasn't trickled down to me, and I think that's based on who I am and who the fan base of YMH is ... you know, middle-aged white dudes and shit. They don't listen to me, they don't care about who the fuck I am," he says. "I'm part of the YMH crew, but I don't think people who watch everything else on that channel watch my podcast. I probably bring in a whole new type of listener.

"Same thing with Joe Rogan. I was on his podcast ... it wasn't a good one. I was drunk. I'm on there talking about fashion and video games and rap music. That's not their world. They're thinking about TRT [testosterone replacement therapy] and conspiracy theories and shit like that."

XXX ... X

When Brown takes the stage at Empire Control room on April 11, he'll have just celebrated one year of sobriety.

It roughly coincides with a good year for him in terms of output. Scaring the Hoes, his ultracreative collaborative album with JPEGMAFIA, has been his most commercially and critically successful work since 2016's Atrocity Exhibition; he had a classic game-changing Brown feature on billy woods and Kenny Segal's fan favorite "Year Zero," and last November finally saw the release of Quaranta, which is often mistaken for his rehab record. It's actually a pre-hab record – recorded live at rock bottom.

A triptych of downtempo, deep-in-his-head tracks that address depression, destruction of a relationship, and feeling trapped by your career encapsulate the LP. Something of a bookend to XXX, Quaranta stands as a mic'd-up midlife crisis in profound ways. He's processing, he's reflecting, he's finding clarity – even if the answers aren't yet there.

The somewhat painful record perhaps contradicts where Brown is today: clearheaded, optimistic, feeling like the artist he was at SXSW 2011. In real time, he's seeing how reports from one of the worst periods of his life became a path to positive influence.

"It's a weird duality to it, isn't it? Because I'm talking about my insecurities and putting it all out there. For me, it's a form of therapy because I was saying shit in songs I wouldn't talk to my friends about or my family about," he admits.

"But it's crazy because I get messages from fans saying 'Man that shit helped me out so fuckin much' or 'You made me look at myself a lot more and I'm sober now.' I get those messages every fuckin' day now and it's fuckin great – I feel great about it."

Brown didn't always use to answer messages from fans, but now he writes back – particularly when it pertains to getting clean. Through his audience, he's come to understand his current sobriety as important context for the record he made in a very fucked-up state.

"I was going through one of the worst periods of my life, and just talking about it made other people look at themself in the mirror and say 'I gotta get my shit together' ... I don't think it'd be that way if I was still in that position," he contemplates. "But they see that I got sober, so it's like a happy ending to the movie."

The question remains: What will Brown's sober record be like?

"It's gonna be some left-field shit," he offers with that lung-clearing laugh. "I've always left the box top open. I never put myself in a box, because I'd jump out that shit and jump into another one."

Scent of Austin VISUAL ARTS

THROUGH APRIL 20, DOUGHERTY ARTS CENTER

Flowers are an integral part of the lives of the Broq-Pa peoples of the Indian subcontinent, a constant adornment for both men and women. The interplay of human and floral forms has fascinated artist Ziesook You and become the prevailing theme of her work onward from 2016. Since relocating to Austin two years ago, the internationally acclaimed artist has given a local twist to that body of work with this new collection featuring single mothers, seniors, and people with multicultural backgrounds as living vases for local flora. – RICHARD WHITTAKER

Madison Baker Music

THURSDAY 28, STUBB'S

After Chelsea Cutler's headline, keep the feelings-fueled melodies going with Austin act Madison Baker's indoor aftershow. One-third of new self-proclaimed "cult country" trio Next of Kin, Baker strikes the perfect balance between danceable pop beats and soul-baring lyrics. The wordsmith delves into all corners of coming-of-age anxieties, like debilitating uncertainty ("Get It Wrong") and growing pains ("Day Job") that'll leave you teary-eyed on the dance floor. Entrance is free with the wristband from Cutler's outdoor show. With new songs and a special guest, Baker's set won't be one to miss. – MIRANDA GARZA

Urban Cultural Fest

MUSIC COMMUNITY

FRIDAY 29 - SATURDAY 30, VIC MATHIAS SHORES

Last year, the 2005-founded, family-friendly Urban Music Fest updated its name to loop in all "Afrocentric aspects of culture." Living up to the rebrand, the event kicks off with a Friday remembrance of Sixth Street bastion Catfish Station (in addition to food and vendors). The Chronicle once wrote that the venue, run by fest co-founder Homer Hill, "held down the heart of Old Pecan with an insider's range of African-American music, food, and culture." Houston jazz saxophonist Kyle Turner, Don Diego, Toni Redd, DJ Casanova, and more tribute the hub. Beyond Barbados-born beatbox standard Doug E. Fresh, founder of the Eighties' Get Fresh Crew, Saturday celebrates the "renewal of R&B" with October London, J. Brown, Bigg Robb, and more. Find tickets at urbanmusicfest.com. – RACHEL RASCOE

Lousy Carter Q&A

Sunday 31, The Rosette @ Austin Classical Guitar

School, Austin-wide opening is on Fri., March 29.

AT WIT'S END

Turns out the pandemic has really done a number on us – even Bob Byington, who heretofore might have seemed impervious to something like a public health emergency, was left a little shaken by it all. He wrote the screenplay for his seventh film while holed up in the Midwest during lockdown, and Lousy Carter hums with the echoey, dreamlike unease of abandoned or half-filled places. An empty rail car. Pickleball courts. The cold, dark chambers of a college campus.

Passing through this muted landscape is the eponymous professor, played by David Krumholtz (Oppenheimer, The Santa Clause), whose specialty is The Great Gatsby. As if that weren't sad enough, within the first five minutes of the film, he learns he has a terminal illness leaving him with just months to live. And things only get worse from there.

Krumholtz is so good in the role that he's almost uncomfortable to watch at times. With hurried phrasing, pained expressions, and selfdeprecating misfires, Lousy galumphs from indignity to indignity. His doctor. His doctor's receptionist. His ex-wife. His friend. His therapist. His mother. His students. Each encounter seems to increase his isolation by another order of magnitude.

"One of the things Lousy Carter's about is what if you suddenly became a person living in a world where everything you're doing, you're kind of doing it wrong?" Byington says. "And that's based on my life. It was weird to wake up one day and feel that I was out of step with the culture."

"When the pandemic hit, I had moved up to Milwaukee a couple of weeks before to work on a TV script, and then everything shifted. It felt like that material became obsolete overnight. I looked at it, and it just seemed ridiculous given what was happening. The voice in my head that had always said, 'Oh, you can wait to write another movie,' for whatever reason, it was replaced by another voice saying, 'You actually can't really wait to write another movie.'" The result manages to blend the controlled burn of Byingtonian wit with a mediation on the limits of tragicomedy itself. After all, no medicine, not even laughter, can cure us when our time has come. Casting about, Lousy looks for eleventh-hour redemption in the eyes of student Gail (Luxy Banner in a brilliant, breakout performance), who sees right through him.

"I was one of the less experienced actors on set," Banner says, "and where I might feel intimidated by working alongside a legend like David, I had to be unimpressed by him in order for our relationship as Gail and Lousy to come through honestly."

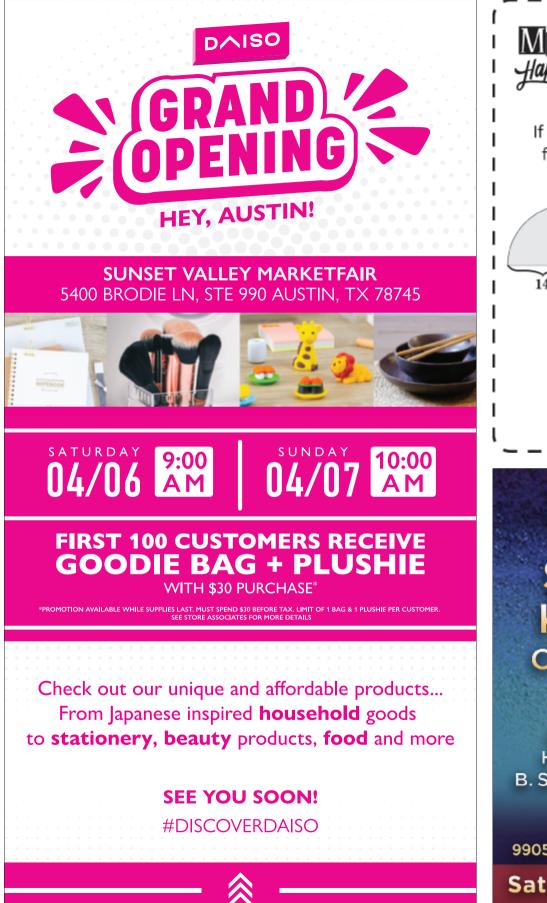

> Nowhere is Gail more honest than when she dismantles The Great Gatsby during class, finally snapping Lousy out of his torpor. In doing so, she sharpens his senses, spurs some self-awareness, and reignites interest in a dormant project. Along the way, they each seem to understand that they're supposed to feel something for the other in a certain way, but don't. It's a pas de deux that serves as a notable departure from much of Byington's previous work.

"I think most viewers won't perceive a whole lot of sexual tension," he says. "Everything is very puritanical now."

If that sounds like a laying down of arms from a filmmaker who first captured the industry's attention with an effort called RSO: Registered Sex Offender and whose last project, Frances Ferguson, was about a teacher who had an illicit relationship with her student, the strategy seems to be working: In one of the biggest coups of Byington's career, the prestigious Magnolia Pictures picked up Lousy Carter for distribution, and after a fruitful festival run, the film is now set for theatrical and streaming release.

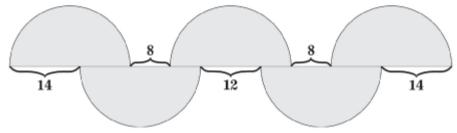

"My career puzzles people, including myself, because it's a series of lateral moves," Byington says. "I would like for this to be a more vertical one." – SHAWN BADGLEY

DAY TRIPS BY GERALD E. MCLEOD

The Big Thicket National Preserve turns 50 years old this year. It took more than four decades of work and compromises for a national preserve protecting about 3% of the original forest to become a reality.

When immigrants in the 1800s began punching holes in the region the Native Americans called the "Big Woods," the thick tangle of bogs, prairies, and forest covered an estimated 3.5 million acres in southeastern Texas.

One of the most biodiverse areas in the U.S., the preserve shelters at least 1,320 plant species, including many that are endemic. Four of the five known types of carnivorous plants found the U.S. are in the Big Thicket.

Add to that diversity of mammals, reptiles, and avian species that either call the Big Thicket home or rely on it seasonally.

By 1940, most of the region's old-growth forest had been clear-cut in two generations.

Several local organizations lobbied state and federal officials to protect what remained of the region's 10 ecosystems. President Gerald Ford signed the legislation creating the Big Thicket National Preserve and the Big Cypress National Preserve in Florida on Oct. 11, 1974: the first two national preserves.

The 113,000-acre reserve is broken into a "string of pearls" of nine land units and six water units primarily along the Neches River and Big Sandy/Village Creek. There are 313 miles of waterways, which is also one of the state's longest wildlife corridors. Of the 33 miles of hiking trails, two short hikes take visitors to see insect-eating plants. There are no campgrounds, but backwoods camping is permitted.

The Big Thicket National Preserve is one of 19 national preserves managed by the National Park Service. Units of the BTNP are scattered between Livingston in the northwest and Beaumont in the southeast. Start any visit to the preserve at the visitor center just north of Kountze on U.S. Highway 287.

Disaster! The Musical THEATRE

THROUGH APRIL 21, GEORGETOWN PALACE THEATRE

The first night on a giant floating casino/discotheque just off Manhattan: What can possibly go wrong? Well, since this is the 1970s, the decade of the disaster movie, how about earthquakes, tidal waves, rats, explosions, and deadly slot machine handles? Jack Plotnick and Seth Rudetsky's Broadway jukebox musical features toe-tappers from the decade of AOR and disco, so there's no better place to be for a night of mayhem and Chuck Mangione. Just watch out for the sharks ... – RICHARD WHITTAKER

Round Rock Express Opening Day SPORTS FRIDAY 29. DELL DIAMOND

Bats will be cracking and Cracker Jacks will be crunched because baby, it's minor league baseball time once again in Round Rock. Though this writer knows pretty much nothing about baseball, he does consider the all-American pastime of just chilling out with friends and family while watching a sport to be divine. According to the Express' website, this opener is against their "in-state foe," the Sugar Land Space Cowboys. After the good ol' players of Round Rock beat 'em in the grand ball 'n' bat field, perhaps these Space Cowboys will consider a career change: a joker? A smoker? Maybe even ... a midnight toker? – JAMES SCOTT

Neill-Cochran Easter COMMUNITY

FRIDAY 29, NEILL-COCHRAN HOUSE MUSEUM

Remember making dioramas for school? Well, here's your chance to experience a dye-o-rama. One of the city's oldest residences, Neill-Cochran near the UT campus opens up its grand and glorious lawn for Easter festivities including live music, games, a scavenger hunt, and egg-dyeing, with supplies and volunteer assistance provided (though you're free to bring your own eggs as well). Not only that, they're opening the museum for free tours all day, so you can peruse the displays and visit the historic house and slave quarters.

Arty Party: Rainbows FAMILY FRIDAY 29, LAGUNA GLORIA

Celebrate our old pal Roy G. Biv and all the other hues and shades at this vibrant morning for junior color enthusiasts aged 3 and under. Kiddos and caregivers will be treated to an interactive storytime exploring art and nature with hands-on activities involving color mixing and dots. Be sure to save time for adventures through the grounds to visit the sculptures, peacocks, and meditative pathways at this gorgeous oasis just west of Downtown. – KAT MCNEVINS

Brutus, Ghostwoman

FRIDAY 29, THE PARISH

"Rehearsing, failing, trying, rehearse more, losing my voice, asking myself why I kept losing my voice." So Stefanie Mannaerts described the process of learning to drum and sing at the same time as she does in rousing Belgian postpunks Brutus. Returning here for the first time since that pre-pandemic Levitation preview, the trio spins third LP and mid-lockdown boon Unison Life. Stijn Vanhoegaerden's crystal-sliver solos slice 'n' dice with delicious brutality, while bassist Peter Mulders' muscled low end balances up against Mannaerts' piercing intonations. Her sweet but fierce delivery raises hairs both honeyed and harrowing – Tanya Donelly taking over Sleater-Kinney. Albertan Evan Uschenko opens as Ghostwoman. – RAOUL HERNANDEZ

North Loop Pop Up Market

MARKET COMMUNITY

SATURDAY 30, BEARDBRAND CAMPUS

Over 40 local artists, artisans, and vendors combine forces to form North Loop Pop Up Market. Saturday marks Lone Wolf Vintage's first pop-up market of 2024 and offers an eclectic collection of vintage clothing, antiques, handcrafted jewelry, books, records, and more. DJ Tropicana Joe soundtracks the market, dealing exclusively in 45 rpm vintage records. Chef Cibelli, Nico's Nitro, and Picnic Party offer a variety of food and drink to feed shoppers as they peruse local goods. – MADELINE DUNCAN

Huston-Tillotson Easter Egg Hunt

FAMILY COMMUNITY

SATURDAY 30. HUSTON-TILLOTSON UNIVERSITY

HTU once again pulls out all the stops for its Easter Egg Hunt, which turns 18 this year. Kids of all ages are invited to a brief storytime covering the meaning of Easter before joining their age groups to be unleashed on the campus in search of filled baskets and thousands of eggs stuffed with candy and coins, prize eggs for school supplies and gift certificates, and the Fabergé egg of the whole affair: a $500 scholarship prize egg. Meet at the Mary E. Branch Gymnasium at 10am, and in case of rain, postpone that to Monday, April 1, 4pm. - KAT MCNEVINS

Spring Native Plant Sale MARKET

FRIDAY 29 - SUNDAY 31, TEXAS ARBORETUM AT LADY BIRD JOHNSON WILDFLOWER CENTER

If you've ever admired the grounds at our city's lovely Wildflower Center and wished your backyard bore a more striking resemblance, they're making it easy for you to get started this April. At their seasonal plant sale, get your hands on all kinds of Texas natives, from Aesculus pavia to Yucca treculeana. Weekend one's sale is reserved for Wildflower Center members only (sign up now and get 10% off purchases); everybody else will be able shop Fridays-Sundays, April 12-28, 9am-1pm. Want to browse their wares ahead of time? See what's available at wildflower.org. - KIMBERLEY JONES

Books Through Bars: Stories From the Prison Books Movement BOOKS

SATURDAY 30. ALIENATED MAJESTY BOOKS

Between 60 and 80% of incarcerated people in America are functionally illiterate, researchers say. That's heartbreaking because reading is one of the best ways for incarcerated people to relieve the boredom of prison life. For 70 years, advocates have encouraged literacy and self-growth by getting books to inmates. Join Austin's Inside Books Project to celebrate a new history of the outreach, Books Through Bars: Stories From the Prison Books Movement. - BRANT BINGAMON

Laetitia Sadier MUSIC SATURDAY 30. PARISH

2019 blew Stereolab fans' minds with the Anglo-French pop synthesists' first tour in over a decade; 2022 landed their exploratory ACL Live return; and now, it's time for just Laetitia. Originator of the band's subculturesensation-making sound alongside Tim Gane, the singer's airy, inviting vocals and sharp sociopolitical lyrics have extended to solo work for over two decades. Beyond "The Groop," her February album Rooting for Love pulls together new influences from minimalist composers like Terry Riley and Steve Reich for a sharp-as-ever encapsulation of her deeply developed lounge and Sixties pop perspective. French-American artist Sofia Bolt opens.

"Ex Voto" VISUAL ARTS

SATURDAY 30, RECSPEC GALLERY

Albuquerque-based artist Beedallo utilizes bold colors and startling imagery in their paintings, many of which depict animals, humans, and religious figures in various states of distress. Their current show, "Ex Voto," takes up the Recspec Gallery's new Annex, created for "our artists to explore space and transform a simple shipping container into an entirely different dimension," the gallery states. Within the container walls, Beedallo's art digs into the urge to pray even without specific religious faith. "An Ex Voto is made as an offering to a saint or to God," their artist's statement reads. "This is often a work in the image of what needs to be fixed." After the show's opening date, it'll run the next three Saturdays in April. – JAMES SCOTT

iSí Se Puede! Day

SATURDAY 30, PARQUE ZARAGOZA

You've driven on his namesake street, and now you can learn more about and celebrate the legacy of labor leader and civil rights activist Cesar Chavez. United by Our Roots Coalition, composed of a host of local orgs and leaders including Austin City Council members, HABLA, PODER, and more, commemorates Chavez's birthday for this 23rd annual ¡Sí Se Puede! Day, translating to "Yes, we can!" Meet at about 9:30 at the park for the march, to be followed by a program with speakers and a day of community connections with nonprofits, Latino-owned vendors, and more. – KAT MCNEVINS

Texas Barbell Spring Showdown SPORTS

SATURDAY 30, CROSSFIT AUSTIN

Have all of those leg days paid off? Show off your best bench press, squat, and deadlift at Texas Barbell's eighth annual Spring Showdown. Complete with a full electronic scoring system and International Weightlifting Federationcertified equipment, this meet will serve as a qualifier for USA Weightlifting National Championship Week and the top male and female lifters will take home the championship belt – and bragging rights, of course. Don't forget your USAW singlet and membership card!

Melotheory MUSIC SATURDAY 30, HOLE IN THE WALL

In the ever-popular world of dancey indie-pop, scene newcomers Melotheory took a more subdued approach with debut single "Breathe." Though light flourishes of funky electric guitar punctuate Austin Pedersen's acoustic strums, Patrick Insull's melancholy vocals dominate. At the track's end, even building percussion drops off in a climactic fakeout, fading out when you'd expect a dynamic explosion. Still, Instagram clips of "A World Away" preview an upbeat follow-up. Saturday's show acts as a release party for the single, rounded out by the pop-punk stylings of Houston quintet East of Eado and the introspective compositions of singer-songwriter Avery Bruce.

Trans Day of Visibility Celebration Market QUEER SUNDAY 31, THE LITTLE GAY SHOP

In 2009, Michigan trans activist Rachel Crandall tired of the only day centering trans folks in the LGBTQ community being about us dying, and got Trans Day of Visibility trending. While honoring our dead is important, so is celebrating the many transgender lives that continue despite all obstacles. Continuing this day's 15-years-long celebratory streak, here's a collaboration between local queer-made mini mall the Little Gay Shop and queer style starters Flavnt Streetwear. This market features over 20 local trans & nonbinary vendors at TLGS' 12th Street digs, so bonus: You can walk to Dear Diary Coffee, where they don't charge extra for alt-milks. Transgender win!

As Trans Day of Visibility approaches, I've been thinking about what being seen actually means. Within Austin, there are trans people in every type of queer-centric community, but they're not often platformed the way their cisgender counterparts are. But in that TDOV spirit, trans members of Austin's growing critter community have made strides into the spotlight – and they're just getting started.

Critter play – or pet play – is a subculture within BDSM where folks dress in leather designed to resemble various animals and play in the headspace of said animals. Pets are often accompanied by handlers, who "hold the leash" so to speak. Much like in the leather community, critters and handlers often enter competitions where they can earn titles both locally and, as is the case for Austin-area pup Max Stanlick, internationally. Stanlick, who won the Iron Bear's Iron Pup 2023 title, will be heading to the International Puppy & Trainer Contest held in Chicago on April 4.

"The biggest effect for me in my community as a titleholder has been Visibility," Stanlick explained about his journey over email. Through one-on-one conversations, teaching and attending kink-related classes, and other activities, he's found "pawsitivity" in other trans folks and allies "working to make things more accessible to those who feel that they are not valued."

For current Iron Pup title holder Rick Zentler, aka Champ the Fox, much of what's endeared him to the Austin pet play scene has been thanks to Boop Society of Central Texas. This local critter play group organizes meetups, walks, and other events tailored to animal role-players. Zentler appreciates how well Boop Society adheres to their motto of accepting all critters and lovers. "As a transgender individual myself, diversity and inclusion are absolute MUSTS for any group I am a part of," he wrote over email, "and I am thrilled to see ample representation within the pet play community here in Austin."

But these are just the pups. Her face being one familiar to anyone who's been around Austin's drag brunch scene, Maxine LaQueene – aka Maxi Herndon – has also earned the title of Texas Handler 2023. "I've been not just like a community leader, but kind of a viewpoint," Herndon said during a phone interview on her titleholder status. "My relationship with the leather community intertwines with being a trans person and also being a drag entertainer." Her aim as a Texas Handler is to connect the communities she's in and bolster their presence.

All three titleholders expressed a great deal of excitement about Austin's critter and kink community's future. That potential will not only be on display on the international stage this month but also right at home: Austin Kink Weekend, a newer annual event that pulls together kinksters across Texas as well as global leather, BDSM, and kink folks, hits April 18-21. While there'll be plenty of classes, kink markets, and parties, new leather and critter competitive titles will also be awarded. Onstage will be trans pups and handlers, putting to work the trans-forward values on which Trans Day of Visibility are based. Good luck, y'all!

Nakia Music SUNDAY 31, STUBB'S

Season one fan favorite on The Voice and a "Local Legends" title-holder according to Matthew McConaughey, Nakia's lore is on par with his electric bluesy arrangements. The metallic, nostalgia-charged shreds of "Go on to School" and "Ain't That Lovin' You Baby" transport audiences back in time in rockabilly retrograde. His fiery instrumentals stay grounded with throaty croons ("Somebody's Sleeping in My Bed") and warbling vocals ("Gimme Some of Yours"). Doubling as the unveiling of Nakia's music video for upbeat classic rock crescendo "Thrill-O-Matic," the night also features support from synth slinger Pelvis Wrestley and folk dreamscaper Junerise. - MIRANDA GARZA

Transgender Day of Visibility Picnic & Art Market

COMMUNITY QUEER MARKET

SUNDAY 31. GRASSROOTS LEADERSHIP

We're a newspaper, so I'm going to hit y'all with some breaking news: I know what the REAL Transgender Agenda is. First, we will be taking over the green space of Grassroots Leadership with blankets and delicious and probably allergy-friendly food. Next, we plan to relax with friends & family while playing lawn games, coloring pictures, blowing bubbles, and listening to live music. Also in this plan, we will be joined by Kind Clinic who'll fortify our forces with rapid HIV/STI testing and important sexual health info. Ah, but the crown jewel of the transgender plot is the art market! Yes, while you cisgender fools walk about your lives, we will be perusing talented trans artists selling their wares at reasonable prices. Muah-ha-ha-ha: Now, a lovely picnic; tomorrow: We take over the world! - JAMES SCOTT

Pup Crawl FOOD MONDAY 1, MULTIPLE LOCATIONS

If dogs could drink, what would be their tipple of choice? My guess: a cold brewski on a good day, but a frozen daiguiri when they've had a tough one. Now, dogs cannot actually drink alcohol - not even Spuds MacKenzie - but you can sup for the pups by purchasing a Pawsport from Austin Humane Society. By dropping a crisp $25, you'll be able to bring your dog along to Dog House Drinkery, MUTTS Canine Cantina Austin, Yard Bar, or the Watering Bowl, where they can run about an on-site dog park and you can get a free drink. Each bar earns you a Pawsport stamp, and all four stamps get you entered in pawsome prize giveaways. It's no dog-safe daiquiri, but it'll do until the science is there. - JAMES SCOTT

THE VERDE REPORT BY ERIC GOODMAN

Austin FC Needs Copa Tejas Now More Than Ever

Things are beginning to get dire in the House of Verde. After hanging tough against three of last season's MLS pacesetters to the tune of three consecutive draws, Austin FC looked completely non-competitive in a dismal 2-0 loss at Orlando City last Saturday.

Against an Orlando team also searching for its first win of the season and missing seven players (four starters) due to international duty, El Tree mustered just a single shot on target - one which, according to MLSSoccer. com, would have resulted in a goal just 2% of the time.

Orlando, on the other hand, peppered Brad Stuver's goal to the tune of 21 shots. seven of which were on target. Jack Lynn with a back-post header in the 42nd minute and Nico Lodeiro with a spectacular free kick in the 64th proved more than enough to comfortably outlast Austin FC and bring a new batch of Verde fans under the increasingly crowded #WolffOut tent.

"There's room for improvement from everyone," head coach Josh Wolff said. "As players, there's much to improve on. I think there were ideas that we didn't execute well. And obviously, that's my responsibility as a coach to bring them in the space and put them in a position to succeed. I don't think we executed particularly well tonight. So, I mean, we share in the blame."

By the time ATXFC kicks off again at Q2 Stadium Saturday night, it will have been close to six months and eight matches dating back to 2023 since the club's last victory. Fortunately for Wolff and Co., the opponent is a familiar one. FC Dallas rides south from Frisco to take on the Verde and Black in the opening game of the 2024 Copa Tejas campaign.

Copa Tejas has held a strange place in Austin FC lore since the club debuted in 2021. Depending on how you rate a fancreated trophy that only includes three clubs in the state of Texas, it's either the first (and second) trophy ever hoisted by ATXFC or a glorified consolation prize annually doled out to the least-bad of three clubs that flounder more often than they thrive.

Austin FC players prepare for a match against Orlando City SC COURTESY OF AUSTIN FC

But these days, Austin FC really can't be picky. And historically speaking, Copa Tejas has meant good things for the Verde and Black. The club finished one win away from lifting the inaugural MLS edition of Copa Tejas in 2021, then finished atop the three-team table in both 2022 and 2023. Seven of the club's 35 all-time MLS wins (20%) have come against either FC Dallas or the Houston Dvnamo.

This version of FC Dallas is especially gettable, too. FCD sits equal with Austin FC in points, goals scored and goals conceded (granted having played one fewer match), and has been absolutely decimated by injuries. While ATXFC recently got star player Sebastián Driussi back into the starting XI, Dallas has been without key players Alan Velasco, Asier Illarramendi, and Paxton Pomykal, among others.

Driussi and his teammates understand this is an opportunity they absolutely must capitalize on.

"For us, it's frustrating to not be able to win." Driussi said. "It's a long run without being able to get a win, and the truth is that it feels very difficult. But Saturday we return home, we can play a derby. I think it's going to be a very important game for us to reach a victory, which is what we most want."

Austin FC plays FC Dallas at home on Saturday, March 30, 7:30pm.

Neko Case MUSIC TUESDAY 2. PARAMOUNT THEATRE

For three decades, Neko Case has spent her time outside indie rock collective the New Pornographers writing brooding Americana ("I Wish I Was the Moon") and, occasionally, boisterous rock ("Man"). 2022 compilation Wild Creatures charts that trajectory across 23 tracks, bolstered in the physical release by commentary from David Byrne, Katie Crutchfield, Shirley Manson, Julien Baker, and more. On Tuesday, the singer-songwriter brings her career retrospective to the Paramount Theatre alongside Imaad Wasif, who imbues folk music with his own take on psvchedelia. - CARYS ANDERSON

TuezGays Presents: Drag Dive & Queeraoke QUEER

TUESDAY 2, SWAN DIVE

Peanut butter and chocolate; Kristen Stewart and fucked mullet haircuts; bagels and cream cheese: These are all pairings that are great separate but mind-blowing together. In this vein, consider our own local double bill: Drag Dive, hosted by her majesty Diamond Dior Davernport, shows drag artists of color topping themselves Tuesday after Tuesday. Queeraoke with CupCake invites you - yes YOU - to come sing the hits in a gay karaoke cacophony. See one and you'll be happy; see 'em one after the other - as they run every single Tuesday - and you'll achieve nirvana. (Editor's note: There is no guarantee of nirvana achievement based on drag show attendance.) - JAMES SCOTT

The Lonesome Heroes MUSIC

THURSDAY 4, FAR OUT LOUNGE

Reignite your Texas twang with the Lonesome Heroes, stirrers of an Americanaand country-infused psychedelic melting pot. The band's latest, Seasons Change, takes the scenic route to Western Swing ("Black Coffee & 3 Cigarettes"), serene strums ("Everything's Been Looking Up"), and honky-tonk ballads (Warm Tears & Honey"). Bandleader Rich Russell brings seering optimism to the album's raspy, textured vocals. In 10 tracks, the group explores jaunty electric peaks ("Prayer and Gasoline") and mellow, violin-laden valleys ("Footsteps"). The lap steel strings of Slow Motion Cowboys and the folk rock radiance of Sarah Burton join the night.

Pitch Perfect Poe

Ballet Austin brings the master of the macabre to life (before killing him again) BY CAT MCCARREY

Screeching violins underscore the tremulous strings of a mind gone wild, ominous percussion an insistent thrum felt deep in the throat. A darkened stage shot with columns of light, mazes of hospital beds with one crazed occupant. Figures rush between the rows of bed panels, silhouettes of masked shadows whispering... "Edgar."

So begins the terror-laden adrenaline rush of Stephen Mills' POE / A Tale of Madness. It moves at breakneck speed, each movement conveying a fevered version of Edgar Allan Poe's life, flashing before his eyes as he struggles in the clutches of his real-life mysterious death.

Some biographical facts: Edgar Allan Poe did actually die after being found delirious in a Baltimore gutter. Death shadowed his life, claiming his mother, her best friend and his adoptive mother, and his wife Sissy. For Ballet Austin, these truths are woven into his storyline, replete with his darker impulses, his tragic loves, and that omnipotent specter of death, crafting a harlequin horror of hope and despair.

Artistic director Stephen Mills says he's always gravitated toward darkness. In high school he was offered the choice between studying the works of William Faulkner and the works of Poe. It's tempting to imagine how his vision would play out when steeped in Southern Gothic tragedy, but he handles regular Gothic style more than well.

Because oh, how this production drips with Gothic splendor. Mills has assembled his supersquad of local talent, a top-tier list of past collaborators creating Poe's harrowing tale. Honestly, there's too much to praise in this production. Name an artistic aspect. Guarantee, it's been expertly handled in Poe. There's Shawn Sides' imaginative libretto, deftly integrating Poe's life with his ghoulish work, or composer and longtime Ballet Austin creative partner Graham Reynolds' cinematic score, leveled up for his first work conducted by Peter Bay with the Austin Symphony Orchestra.

Margaret Mitchell's lush costumes convey 1800s chic and pure Victorian dread, suit tails and robes flowing against wide ballgowns and wisped funeral shrouds. Set designer Michael B. Raiford's stagescapes are, to quote Stephen Mills, "clean, clear, simple, odd." Certain pieces, like the use of hospital beds, spectral feathers, and fairy tale coffins, linger in the mind far beyond the ballet's fartoo-soon curtain fall. Tony Tucci and Erin Fleming's lighting adds atmospheric terror to those sets through controlled shadows, fluorescent pendulums, and stark spotlights on dancers in spine-chilling formations. And of course, there's the brilliant choreography. Collaboratively made with the dance corps in a shockingly quick two-week period, pieces are hypnotic in their off-kilter grace. The enormously talented company blends the best of contemporary and classical ballet, hurdling tonal shifts with ease.

Pointe work has never seemed so sinister. Characters often mirror each other jerkily, the repetition off just enough to be deeply unsettling. These mirrors are especially impressive when wrought between Poe and his doppelgänger the Imp of the Perverse, a leering version of Poe's worst self snapping at his heels (those roles were split cast – I saw Morgan Stillman as Poe and Colin Canavan as the Imp).

There's traditional beauty, often shown through the watchful Raven (Ian J. Bethany) and the stately character of Death (Edward Carr). A pas de deux of Death and Poe's mother (Grace Morton, swapping each night between mother and Sissy with Katherine Deuitch) serves as a lovely respite after the furious whirligig of previous numbers. Carr's Death is horrifying, yet strangely comforting as he drags his victims off in a final embrace. And the Raven, a hulking and befeathered skeleton, performs impressive swooping solos with avian grace – that is, when he's not perched in disquieting repose near Poe.

Poe himself seemed to hold back until the second act, giving space to numbers where the company highlights their eerie chops. In a segment showing Poe's creative furor, Sissy (Deuitch) prowls over and beneath his writing desk like a caged cat. Poe's imagined characters from the House of Usher infringe on the stage as he writes, luring him to dance as lines between life and art blur. But Stillman's Poe shines in a late number where he struggles against a parachuted black cloth controlled by the representations of his struggles. He performs gymnastic feats of contortion, shrouded but tumbling through it like water. It's environment and movement in perfect harmony.

This is a ballet I immediately wanted to watch again, and again, and again. It's a testament to Austin's continued artistic privilege. We get to claim this collection of collaborators as our own. They've created a work that deserves more than three nights of performances. It's not shopped out yet – "the paint isn't even dry on it," says Mills – but hopefully others will soon get the pure pleasure of experiencing the madness of Stephen Mills and company.

Composer Ryuichi Sakamoto delivers his final performance in a stirring concert documentary

Before I knew Ryuichi Sakamoto's name, I knew how his music made me feel. As an 8-year-old watching Bernardo Bertolucci's The Last Emperor (too young), I had to flee to the movie theatre lobby, so overwhelmed was I by the sensory intensity of the film, bolstered significantly by Sakamoto's theme music – grave and imperial, then uneasy, forlorn.

You won't hear an exact re-creation of his multi-instrument Last Emperor score (for which he won an Academy Award alongside additional composers David Byrne and Cong Su) in Ryuichi Sakamoto | Opus. The concert documentary features exactly one instrument – a grand piano – and one performer – Sakamoto himself. You also won't hear from the artist, who communicates solely through his music. You won't even find out the composition titles as Sakamoto plays them, an omission which felt unnecessarily stingy to me. While many viewers will want to go into the experience cold, I think some context deepens the experience.

Ryuichi Sakamoto | Opus was conceived as a final artistic statement from a man knowing death was near and his ability to adequately perform his great works was waning: adding further poignancy, the film is directed by his son, Neo Sora, and produced by his wife and manager. Neo's mother Norika Sora. Filmed over the course of a week at the NHK Broadcasting Center's 509 Studio in Tokvo, the film - a hushed, hypnotic thing - pulls non-chronologically from different eras of Sakamoto's career, including Yellow Magic Orchestra, his influential electronic pop outfit, and his film compositions, such as 1983's Merry Christmas, Mr. Lawrence (in which he also co-starred as the tortured POW camp commander, Captain Yonoi).

Barring intimate familiarity with Sakamoto's canon, the 20 distinct compositions featured here bleed into a larger whole, with only the briefest demarcations between them. Cinematographer Bill Kirstein led a team navigating three 4K cameras around the space; the thoughtful camera movements and Takuya Kawakami's editing mimic the way the eye travels during a live performance, taking in the size of the room, the way Sakamoto's foot moves on the pedals, his hands on the keyboard. Corny but true: The concert doc format provides the best seat in the house. The effort on Sakamoto's part is palpable, though. At the end of one song, the sound cuts out but we see him cough, his body sagging. Another song ends in frustration, his fingers in close-up seemingly not moving the way he wants them to. The effect is plain: The artist is spent.

Some interpretations are startling. "Tong Poo," from his Yellow Magic Orchestra days, is a real bop; transposed to solo piano here, it at first sounds worryingly like something you might hear while you're shopping for gloves at Nordstrom. Then Sakamoto grows more animated. The lower register rumbles like a stomach growl, and he gets into the groove: The artist is feeling himself.

Filmed in magnificent monochrome with the kind of richness that reminds you black and white are colors too, Ryuichi Sakamoto | Opus will put you in a contemplative place. Knowing the film's unspoken coda unavoidably informs the experience: Six months after filming this performance piece. Sakamoto died from cancer. Within that context, even a song titled "Happy End" seems to gesture at a gloaming. In an artistic statement accompanying the press notes, Sakamoto said he intended the set list to suggest "the progression of time from morning into night" - a subtlety lost on me until a lighting cue late in the film created a perfect circle of luminescence, like a full moon. An ephemeral effect, but the point is made, here and in the Latin aphorism that caps the film, its only explicit authorial statement. The gist? The artist is gone. The art endures.

Alejandro Escovedo

ECHO DANCING (YEPROC)

Duke Ellington whammied up a half-century oeuvre that he spent the same career revisiting, revamping, and remixing. Guitar-strapped, not piano-side, Alejandro Escovedo, 73, plies his familial trade longer than that, with writing credits stretching back to the Seventies. Across at least four of those decades in Austin - from orchestra bandleader to Buick MacKane getaway driver - he's stringed up, stripped down, and electrified his compositions of heart and stones, yet never as revelatory as Echo Dancing. A one-man Suicide or, locally, Timbuk3 - Brian Eno, even - Escovedo translates a 14-track playlist spanning 70 deepdive minutes from iconic 20th century (boy) analog to new millennial ghosts in the machine. Digital, dubby, deconstructionist, Echo Dancing transmits a Johnny Cash American Recordings quality. As songs peel back, Escovedo's spectral delivery fills the frame.

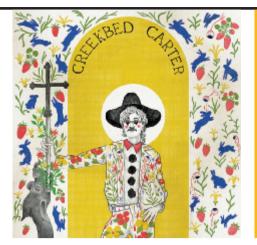

Glam rocker "Castanets" becomes border radio boombox "Castañuelas." bouncing and bopping and lurching through neon electronics and a sentient beat. Stooges-like stomper "Everybody Loves Me" thickens distortion into a menacing throb, while "Inside This Dance" vapes on Iggy Pop's noir patio. "John Conquest" retains side project Buick MacKane's bristling, static-y riff hotwired atop a rudimentary piano drubbing and drum-machine smackdown.

Recasting not only prolongs a song's life, but renews it - reinvents it, revitalizes it. Airing out lifetimes locked in a closet of emotional gravity, Echo Dancing rechannels these selections' romantic existentialism and magical realism into a techno meditation. The lachrymose "Last to Know" breaks orbit from its Earthbound mortality to a space odyssey weightlessness.

By the end, seven-minute interstellar drift "Thought I'd Let You Know" from 2016 workhorse Burn Something Beautiful, both the maestro and his audience crackle electrical impulses. - RAOUL HERNANDEZ

> Alejandro Escovedo celebrates his new album at Antone's Nightclub on Friday, March 29 with James Mastro.

Creekbed Carter Hogan CREEKBED CARTER (GAR HOLE)

If some see folk as a tradition-focused discipline belonging to decades past. Creekbed Carter Hogan stands as living proof of the genre's future-forward dynamism. Released via Arkansas-based "unAmericana" label Gar Hole Records, the trans songwriter's self-titled release packs enough open-road mysticism, brokenhearted yearning, and laugh-out-loud wit to fill their signature pinch-front cowboy hat. In the folk lineage, the Oregon native excels at penning tracks that land both like a warm hug and a dagger to the heart. Take standout "Sycamore," a delicately fingerpicked ode to bodily transcendence anchored by Hogan's crystalline vocals. Breaking free from the inescapable labyrinth of socialized gender, the track's chorus ditches embodiment for a more expansive take on existence: "But now that I'm old as a sycamore tree/ All of me flowering wild and free/ I'm closer now than I'll ever be/ To the shape and the form of eternity." Scholarly romp "The Relic Song" pokes fun at Catholic canon law, while bittersweet ditty "Through With Lovin'" curses a wayward lover with tonguein-cheek meta-country vocal play: "Fool me septuplet/Fool me octagon/When will I stop feelin' so damn woebegone?" With contributions from up-and-comers Large Brush Collection to queergrass staples Brand New Key, Creekbed Carter plants a folky freak flag in Austin's burgeoning new-country community. - GENEVIEVE WOOD

RELLY WILLIS & MELISSA CARPER & BRENNEN LEIGH

Wonder Women of Country

WILLIS, CARPER, LEIGH (BISMEAUX)

A spate of shared bills brought them together, but the Wonder Women of Country have cemented their partnership with a kaleidoscope of throwback country soundscapes and intricate harmonies. On their debut six-song EP titled after each of their last names, the Texas-rooted supergroup – Kelly Willis, Melissa Carper, and Brennen Leigh - uses their combined prowess to sharpen and polish each other's sensibilities. Each songwriter claims songwriting credits on two tracks, some co-written, giving listeners a cohesive but distinct tour through styles. The meandering steel guitar that lends Texas swing lilt to "Fly Ya to Hawaii" flows into barroom weeper "Another Broken Heart" seamlessly, despite the veer into Seventies country-pop. Leigh and Carper's shared love of Hank Williams and the Carter Family shines through on the sweet, mandolin-driven "Won't Be Worried Long," rooted by Carper's arresting soprano. A stilling reimagining of John Prine and Roger Cook's "I Have Met My Love Today" closes the EP, the trio's precise, clean harmonies intertwining over poignant accordion lines and simple, hand-thumped percussion. A delightful country buffet, Willis, Carper, Leigh pulls on the superpowers of three of the genre's ever-dwindling purists. - ABBY JOHNSTON

Photokem HALF TON PET

Like the expectant sound of a symphony tuning up, the layered experimental rock of Photokem again and again swells to guizzical excitement. Bottle rocket whirs, acoustic guitar, and isolated orchestral instruments shoot off around the deliciously unhurried, Dean Blunt-deep vocals of Nana Acheampong on the guartet's Half Ton Pet. He moves all over, flexing from spoken repetitions ("no cover, no coat") to pitched-up singing. Alongside Evan Ryckebusch on cello and Jack Kelly on synth, band member Nico Fennell leans into his textural, improvisational producer aspirations - inspired by Ryuichi Sakamoto's compositions, and sampling Ghanaian gospel singer Cecilia Marfo ("Shalom, Peace"). Going global, piano-led rush "Yugoslavia for Business" lists countries in what could be admiration or inside joking, delivered without a hint of irony. Decentered from the rock base of 2022 EP Luffon Bright, these four songs feel more sketchlike, and certainly transitive. The now-New-Yorkbased band keeps local ties through arrangements by Font/stunts' Anthony Laurence, flittering woodwinds by Felt Out's Walter Nichols, mastering by Will Clark, and emails by new Mallard PR. With an EP bio funnily stating that the recent UT-Austin grads are now employed, Half Ton Pet captures the time prior, when they were figuring out what's next. - RACHEL RASCOE

The Luy Doc

Dear Luy Doc

OK, I'll start out that I am recently widowed 15 months, from a 41-year relationship/marriage with my husband. After 15 months I decided to start looking. as my right arm is now twice as hig as my left. When I was in my 20s "the bar" was the thing, or a bookstore (don't ask), but now it seems it's all social media dating apps. New to me. I met a guy on Grindr, which surprisingly is not the Wild Wild West I thought it would be, and actually very nice and decent, and me at 63 he at 38 Then, a guy I've known as an acquaintance through work, he went with a bunch of us recently to Round Top to hear James Dick play. We were on a group chat due to ETA. etc., and now he is solo chatting me up like crazy and when I asked that if I didn't know better I would say be was flirting with me, he stated, "You are just now figuring it out?" He at 43 me at 63. I'm at a loss. I want to think this is all good but somewhere in the back of my mind I dunno. Any sage - A Widower of the Wild West advice?

"Grindr Gaps"

I'm guessing you're not a devoted reader of this column. That's cool. I'm not sure they actually exist now that my mom is dead. I forward this supposition not because of the biological unlikelihood of a 63-year-old man being my mother, but rather because anyone who has spent some quality time at this end of the Chronicle knows that sage advice really isn't my forte. Also, full disclosure: I used the word "forte" instead of my go-to "jam" in the preceding instance because I felt like it tied in nicely with James Dick/classical music vibe you were throwing down. It's refreshing to keep it classical every now and again. Also, fun fact: James Dick is from Hutchinson, Kansas. I had a cousin up that way. He was a crop duster, and by "crop duster" I don't mean the type of fellow who ruins a James Dick piano recital by surreptitiously passing gas on his way the men's room. I mean the type of airplane pilot who flies dangerously close to the ground spraving actual pesticides on crops - which. I might add, stretch as far as the eve can see up in Hutchinson, Kansas. I feel completely safe in saying it's a place you will never pass through - unless for some impossible reason you have kinfolk in Darlow, Yoder, or Cruppers Corner.

I think it's also safe to say that James Dick grew up with relatively few distractions to keep him from mastering the piano. Yes. Hutchinson does have a zoo, but unless you want to feel suicidally sad about animals, you should probably avoid that place like Chernobyl. There is also a space museum - the Cosmosphere - which might come as a surprise until you consider the fact that there are very few places with more space than Hutchinson. Of course, Hutchinson's real claim to fame is that it's been the home of the Kansas State Fair since 1913. The fair is the largest single event in the state and attracts over 300,000 people to Hutchinson every year. That said, it's a place you will never pass through

To be fair, the same could be said of Round Top. Texas, but somehow, despite being short one sad zoo, a Cosmosphere and a state fair, it's pretty poppin' for a small town. Maybe it's the music festival? It surely isn't the Grindr action, and I'm not sure if the Lark actually counts as a bookstore. It's a good thing you're in Austin, eh? Given your recent experience, it probably seems like this town is brimming with fresh-faced, middle-aged men looking to hook up with a sexy sexagenarian like yourself, and when it comes down to it, optically speaking, there isn't a huge difference between a 43-year-old penis and a 63-year-old penis - unless the 63-year-old's pubic hair is the Wild Wild West, which, coincidentally, a 43-year-old recognizes as a Will Smith movie/song and a 63-year-old recognizes as the singular artistic achievement of the Eighties band Escape Club. There are probably some other problems with a 20-year age gap, but none of them are insurmountable. I think the important thing to keep in mind is that, though it might seem like it now, the Grindr pool for 63-year-old gay men isn't bottomless - and by that I am not saying it's mostly tops, I am saying that at some point you might have to settle for some 50-year-olds, so keep your expectations low and your gratitude high - just the same as you would if you were passing through Hutchinson, Kansas.

FREE WILL ASTROLOGY MAR. 29 -APR.4 by Rob Brezsny

ARIES (March 21-April 19): In the coming days, your hunger will be so inexhaustible that you may feel driven to devour. extravagant amounts of food and drink. It's possible you will gain 10 nounds in a very short time. Who knows? You might even enter an extreme eating contest and devour 46 dozen oysters in 10 minutes! APRIL FOOL! Although what I just said is remotely plausible. I foresee that you will sublimate your exorbitant hunger. You will realize it is spiritual in nature and can't be gratified by eating food. As you explore your voracious longings, you will hopefully discover a half-hidden psychological need you have been suppressing. And then you will liberate that need and feed it what it craves!

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Taurus novelist Lionel Shriver writes, "There's a freedom in apathy, a wild, dizzying liberation on which you can almost get drunk." In accordance with astrological omens. I recommend you experiment with Shriver's strategy in the coming weeks. APRIL FOOL! I lied. In fact, Lionel Shriver's comment is one of the dumbest thoughts I have ever heard. Why would anyone want the cheap, damaged liberation that comes from feeling indifferent, numb, and passionless? Please do all you can to disrupt and dissolve any attraction you may have to that state, Taurus. In my opinion, you now have a sacred duty to cultivate extra helpings of enthusiasm, zeal, liveliness, and ambition, GEMINI (May 21-June 20): At enormous cost and after years of study, I have finally figured out the meaning of life, at least as it applies to you Geminis. Unfortunately, I won't be able to reveal it to you unless you send me $1,000 and a case of Veuve Clicquot Champagne. I've got to recoup my investment, right?! APRIL FOOL! Most of what Liust said was a dirty lie. It's true that I have worked hard to uncover the meaning of life for you Geminis. But I haven't found it vet. And even if I did. I would of course provide it to you free. Luckily, you are now in a prime position to make dramatic progress in deciphering the meaning of life for yourself.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): For a limited time only, you have permission from the cosmos to be a wildly charismatic egomaniac who brags incessantly and insists on getting your selfish needs met at all times and in all places. Please feel free to have maximum amounts of narcissistic fun. Cancerian! APRIL FOOL! I was exaggerating a bit, hoping to offer you medicinal encouragement so you will stop being so damn humble and selfeffacing all the time. But the truth is, now is indeed an excellent time to assert your authority, expand your clout, and flaunt your potency and sovereignty

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Michael Scott was a character in the TV sitcom The Office. He was the boss of a paper company. Played by Leo actor Steve Carell, he was notoriously self-centered and obnoxious. However, there was one famous scene I will urge you to emulate. He was asked if he would rather be feared or loved. He replied, "Um, easy, both. I want people to be afraid of how much they love me." Be like Michael Scott, Leo! APRIL FOOL! I was half-kidding. It's true I'm quite excited by the likelihood that you will receive floods of love in the coming weeks. It's also true that I think you should do everything possible to boost this likelihood. But I would rather that people be amazed and pleased at how much they love you, not afraid.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Now would be an excellent time for you to snag a Sugar Daddy or Sugar Momma or Sugar NonBinary Nurturer. The astrological omens are telling me that life is expanding its willingness and capacity to provide you with help, support, and maybe even extra cash. I dare you to dangle yourself as bait and sell your soul to the highest bidder. APRIL FOOL! I was half-kidding. While I do believe it's prime time to ask for and receive more help, support, and extra cash, I don't believe you will have to sell your soul to get any of it. Just be yourself!

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Happy Unbirthday, Libra! It's that time halfway between your last birthday and your next. Here are the presents I plan to give you: a boost in your receptivity to he loved and needed: a constructive relationship with obsession: more power to accomplish the half-right thing when it's hard to do the totally right thing: the disposal of 85 percent of the psychic trash left over from the time between 2018 and 2023; and a provocative new invitation to transcend an outworn old taboo. APRIL FOOL! The truth is, I can't possibly supply every one of you with these fine offerings, so please bestow them on yourself. Luckily, the cosmic currents will conspire with you to make these things happen.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Now would be an excellent time to seek liposuction, a facelift, Botox, buttocks augmentation, or hair transplants. Cosmic rhythms will be on your side if you change how you look. APRIL FOOL! Everything I just said was a lie. I've got nothing against cosmetic surgery, but now is not the right time to alter your appearance. Here's the correct oracle: Shed your disguises, stop hiding anything about who you really are, and show how proud you are of your idiosyncrasies.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): I command you to love Jesus and Buddha! If you don't, you will burn in Hell! APRIL FOOL! I was just kidding. I was being sensationalistic to grab your attention. Here's my real, true oracle for you: Love everybody, including Jesus and Buddha. And I mean love them all twice as strong and wild and tender. The cosmic powers ask it of you! The health of your immortal soul depends on it! Yes, Sagittarius, for your own selfish sake, you need to pour out more adoration and care and compassion than you ever have before. I'm not exaggerating! Be a lavish Fountain of Love!

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): If you gave me permission. I would cast a spell to arouse in you a case of ergophobia, i.e., an aversion to work. I think you need to take a sweet sabbatical from doing business as usual. APRIL FOOL! I was just joking about casting a spell on you. But I do wish you would indulge in a lazy, do-nothing retreat. If you want your ambitions to thrive later, you will be wise to enjoy a brief period of delightful emptiness and relaxing dormancy. As Buddhist teacher Sylvia Boorstein recommends "Don't just do something! Sit there!"

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): In accordance with current astrological omens, I suggest you get the book Brain Surgery for Beginners by Steven Parker and David West. You now have the power to learn and even master complex new skills, and this would be a excellent place to start. APRIL FOOL! I was half-kidding. I don't really think you should take a scalpel to the gray matter of your friends and family members - or yourself, for that matter. But I am quite certain that you currently have an enhanced power to learn and even master new skills. It's time to raise your educational ambitions to a higher octave. Find out what lessons and training you need most, then make plans to get them.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): In the religious beliefs of Louisiana Voodoo, one God presides over the universe but never meddles in the details of life. There are also many spirits who are always intervening and tinkering, intimately involved in the daily rhythm. They might do nice things for people or play tricks on them - and everything in between. In alignment with current astrological omens, I urge you to convert to the Louisiana Voodoo religion and try ingenious strategies to get the spirits to do your bidding. APRIL FOOL! I don't really think you should convert. However, I believe it would be fun and righteous for you to proceed as if spirits are everywhere - and assume that you have the power to harness them to work on your behalf.
